DECKSON, DEWOLF & CO

Friday, July 5, 1872. The Ballot in England. After a contest which has been extended over a period of more than twenty years, a bill has passed the House of Commons, and we believe this time assented to by the Lords, making the system of ballot at elections the law of the land in England. Besides abolishing the old system of open voting, for which the hereditary and monied aristocracies of the nation so long and successfully coutended, the old and absurd system of the public nomination of candidates has also been done away with, and will with the advent of the new dispensation of the ballot be numbered among the things that were. The adoption of the ballot affords another evidence of the classicity of the British Constitution, and the irresistible influence which public opinion exerts upon the minds and actions of the law-making power. It will be in the recollection of many with what apparent hopelessness the advocates of the new system urged the subject upon the unwilling attention of the assembled wisdom of the British nation—how session after session and year after year the Ballot Bill sp-peared upon the Orders of the Day in the House of Commons, to be taken up, discussed, and rejected by an overwhelming majority, the mover and seconder at first being the only friends the measure could count in a House of six hundred members. But I ke many other important and at first unpopular measures, the more it was subjected to the crucible of fair discussion the more popular it became, and every succeeding year it gained favor and support both in the House and out of it, until finally it has triumphed over all opposition and become law. The success which the advocates of the ballot have achieved in England, is itself the best evidence that can be adduced in favor of the principle. The ablest minds and the readiest writers in the Kingdom have been arrayed against it, and exhausted every argument which their in-geneity could suggest to defeat it; but their labors have proved utterly futile, and instead of convincing others that they were right they have convinced themselves that they were wrong—something after the manner of the learned Bishop Colenso, who in endeavoring to impart Biblical instruction to the natives of Southern Africa brought his labors to a conclusion by becoming himself a skeptic—there being this dif-ference, however, between the two cases that whereas the people of England took a step forward the Bishop took one backward. The old argument that open voting was the more manly and independent method of exercising the franpendent method of exercising the franchise, while there was something about the ballot that savored of political cowardice, an underhand method of doing business repuguant to the feelings of the plain, outspoken Englishman, doubtless had its influence upon the minds of the mass of the people in the early history of the discussion, but the more thoroughless mass of the people is the more thoroughly the subject was ventilated the firmer did it take hold upon the public mind, until finally is overpowered all opposition. The grant object of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the polls and there give a free and untrammelled expression of their opinions on the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the political security of the franchise is to enable the people to go to the people to g pression of their opinions on the political issues of the day, by recording their votes in favor of that man or party whom they conscientiously believe will, if elected, The history of the past abounds in evidence against the practice of open voting It is safe to say that not one-third of all It is sale to say that not one-third of all who occupy seats in the present House of Colamons of England truly represent the wishes of sentiments of a majority of their constituents. The influence of money and business patronage are what usually decide political contests in the Mother Country, and not the political creed or intellectual worth of the respective candidates. As a rule the electors vote not from conviction, but from necessity—the food they eat and the clothes they wear are continged upon the vote they give, and to talk of manly and independent roting in connection with such a system, voting in connection with such a system is simply to pervert language and trifle with the tremistible logic of facts. On the other hand, the ballot affords the fullest scope for an honest and conscientious exercise of the franchise—no one will know how an elector has voted, and, will know how an elector has voted, and, what is of equal importance, no one will know how the poll is going. The elector who teels disposed to keep his own consel can do so, and can vote just as he likes, seither landlord, employer, creditor, nor any one else having it in their power to call him to second for voting according to the distrets of his own conscience. To the discredit of the Canadian House of Commons, a bill to authorize the adoption of the ballot was only the other day thrown out of the House by the other day thrown out of the House by a large adverse vote. We had boped that the spirit of fogyism was about played out in the Duminion of Canada, but it seems there is a remnant of it left there still. However, it cannot survive there much longer, and the fact that the British fariument has set them an example in this matter of the ballet, will likely exert a wholesome influence upon the minds of Canadian statesmen when next the ballot bill is brought before them. In our local House hat accession a bill for the introduction of the ballot at elections was thrown out for the accession by the false ruling of Mr Speaker; but inasmuch as a majority of the present members are pledged to their constituents to vote for the measure when it does come to see it in full operation in this Province on the occasion of future elections. Memory presides over the past. Fell s

The Scottish Gathering.

The anniversary of American Independence Day, yestery, was made the occasion of the annual Scottish gathering of the St. Andrew's and Caledonian Society. The summer morn, as if in homage to our Scottish friends, broke forth in brightest sounding, which was Columbia; an Act to extend certain Acts reand Caledonian Society. The aummer morn, as if in homage to our Scottish friends, broke forth in brightest sunshine, which was maintained throughout the day, tempered, however, by genial breezes which lent to it a special charm and imbaed the happy throng of pleasurer seekers with an impetus for the active sports and amusements which ever cluster round a Scottish gathering. Nearly all of our leading citizens, including the elite and fashion of the neighborhood, were pres-ent, and the elegant costumes of the ladies lent an additional charm to the scene, which,

The Match.

OLYMPIA, July 3d, 1872, EDITOR STANDARD: - The Internationa match took place at Chamber's Prairie; gam-was called at 1:15 p. m. The Olympics los the toss and were sent to the bat. The day was one of the hottest of the seasou, and our boys were entirely unfitted to play, having bad but little sleep. Most of them having attended the Firemen's Picnic on the 1st, and had no sleep coming over. It was easily seen that the game would be disastrons to the Victorians. Most of the players seemed to be wern out, which, together with the heat, made them play a very poor game. Besides which, the Washington Club brought a red ball to play with, which the "O," not being used to, helped to their failure.

Further particulars next boat. The "O" want to play acceture match. They are to be regaled at a banquet this evening.
